Job Zone Classification Methodology

Federal ONET Job Zone Classifications are based on national criteria and do not always reflect state-level differences in required training, licensure, or experience for different occupations. This Rhode Island Job Zones reference guide reclassifies some occupations into a different Job Zone based on local conditions.

The current ONET Job Zone classification was used as the primary framework for coding occupations by the level of preparation typically required for entry into the occupation. The current ONET classification groups occupations requiring very little to some preparation into a combined Job Zone 1–2 category. Because the distinction between Job Zones 1 and 2 was retained in the previous version of the ONET classification, a previous ONET Job Zone designation (ONET Version 29.1) was used to further differentiate occupations within the current Job Zone 1–2 category.

Specifically, occupations classified as Job Zone 1–2 in the current ONET system were reviewed against their corresponding Job Zone classifications in the previous ONET system. Occupations that had previously been classified as Job Zone 1 were assigned a Job Zone 1 designation unless licensure is required by the state of Rhode Island, or there is a Rhode Island Registered Apprenticeship track. Occupations that had previously been classified as Job Zone 2 were assigned to the Job Zone 2 designation unless they were deemed to require minimal formal training in Rhode Island. Thus, the historical Job Zone 1 and 2 classifications were used only to facilitate disaggregation to the current combined Job Zone 1–2 category.

For all occupations classified outside of the current Job Zone 1–2 category, the current ONET Job Zone classification was retained without modification. The resulting coding therefore preserves the distinction between the former Job Zones 1 and 2 while maintaining the most recent ONET classifications for occupations in Job Zones 3, 4, and 5.

Under the resulting classification, occupations are grouped into the following preparation-level categories:

Job Zone 1: Occupations requiring very little preparation.

Job Zone 2: Occupations requiring some preparation.

Job Zone 3: Occupations requiring medium preparation.

Job Zone 4: Occupations requiring considerable preparation.

Job Zone 5: Occupations requiring extensive preparation.

This approach combines information from the previous and current ONET Job Zone systems to provide a more detailed measure of occupational preparation. It retains the updated classifications for the majority of occupations while restoring the former distinction between occupations requiring very little preparation (Job Zone 1) and those requiring some preparation (Job Zone 2).
